1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the main results of the paper, which are summarized in the following theorems. The first theorem states that if a function $f(x)$ is continuous on the interval $[a, b]$ and if the function $F(x)$ is defined by the formula $F(x) = \int_a^x f(t) dt$, then the function $F(x)$ is continuous on the interval $[a, b]$ and its derivative is equal to $f(x)$.

The second theorem states that if a function $f(x)$ is continuous on the interval $[a, b]$ and if the function $F(x)$ is defined by the formula $F(x) = \int_a^x f(t) dt$, then the function $F(x)$ is continuous on the interval $[a, b]$ and its derivative is equal to $f(x)$.

The third theorem states that if a function $f(x)$ is continuous on the interval $[a, b]$ and if the function $F(x)$ is defined by the formula $F(x) = \int_a^x f(t) dt$, then the function $F(x)$ is continuous

Easter is always celebrated on Sunday, but a black man, Pope Victor I, decided it was his 10-year papacy from 189-199 A.D.

Victor I was not the only black pope of the church. There were at least two others in the centuries, and there are 65 black saints.

Black theologians had a critical inflection: formulating the Nicene Creed, fundamental elements from which today's Roman Catholicism was drawn, instituting Latin as the church's language, achieving the peace with the Roman Empire that legalized the previously outlawed practices.

"The black man is not just a stranger who wandered in and everyone accepted him," said Rev. Allen J. McNeeley, coordinator of the Archdiocese Inter-Cultural Formation Commission, a national branch of the church.

ALTHOUGH VATICAN archives keep black contributions in the church, many have ignored them, said Mr. McNeeley, a black theologian.

Today, archeologists and historians emphasize the presence in original Christianity and Judaism of the Holy Land and nearby areas. Nor is the fertile mingling of black Cushites, black-skinned Phoenicians and Semites who brought their cultures and religions — and together cre-

The centers in Midland and Holland concentrate on assisting mentally retarded persons. Centers in Gaylord, Lansing and Saginaw aid blind persons. The Cristo Rey Hispanic Handicapper program in Lansing serves the Spanish-speaking population. (Others are in Kalamazoo, Ann Arbor, Pontiac and Grand Rapids.)

But the future of these programs, all of them less than seven years old, is uncertain. Robert McConnell, supervisor of program development for Michigan Rehabilitation Services, says the federal government has indicated it will end grants for independent living centers in the summer of 1984.

Dear Jory: I'm Joe Gaul and I'm 19 years old. One Sunday you said you would like to hear more from teenagers who have cancer.

I was healthy and athletic until, at 16, a grand mal seizure knocked me out. Tests showed a fairly large malignant brain tumor. Easter's on Sunday because of a black pope

This is part of a month-long series on persons, culture and events in black history.

By RUTH SEYMOUR

Free Press Staff Writer

Easter is always celebrated on Sunday. That's because a black man, Pope Victor I, decided it would be so during his 10-year papacy from 189-199 A.D.

Victor I was not the only black pope of the Catholic church. There were at least two others in the first five centuries, and there are 65 black saints.

Black theologians had a critical influence on Christianity: formulating the Nicene Creed, fusing the liturgical elements from which today's Roman Catholic mass was drawn, instituting Latin as the church language, and achieving the peace with the Roman emperor Constantine that legalized the previously outlawed church.

"The black man is not just a stranger to the church who wandered in and everyone accepted him," says the Rev. Allen J. McNeeley, coordinator of the Detroit Archdiocese Inter-Cultural Formation Center, an educational branch of the church.

ALTHOUGH VATICAN archives kept records of black contributions in the church, mainstream scholars have ignored them, said Mr. McNeeley, a church deacon.

Today, archeologists and historians explain the black presence in original Christianity and Judaism by looking to the Holy Land and nearby areas. North Africa was a fertile mingling of black Cushites, black Nubians, pale-skinned Phoenicians and Semites who shared their cultures and religions — and together created new ones.

Thus, Judaism has hidden black roots as well. Some scholars suggest Moses, the founder of Jewish law, was black, but the Old Testament does not mention that. It does state, however, that he married a black woman — a "Cushite" or "Ethiopian," (Numbers 12:1).

A THOROUGHLY researched, and officially sanctioned, study of black involvement in the early church was produced by the Inter-Cultural Formation Center in a booklet called "Afro-American and Catholic," (available for $2 from the center).

This research dusts off the recorded lives of many black builders of Christianity:

- St. Victor I, the 2d Century pope who became famous for settling the dispute over the dating of Easter and reuniting the church. It was also during his reign that Latin replaced Greek as the church's official language.
- St. Melchiades, whose papacy lasted from 311-314 A.D., made peace with Constantine in the famous Edict of Milan, which officially ended the persecution of Christians by the government.

See BLACKS, Page 3G

Martin de Porres, canonized in 1962, is one of the few well-known black saints.

Others provide information, training, peer counseling and other services to hundreds of Michigan handicappers each year.

The centers in Midland and Holland concentrate on assisting mentally retarded persons. Centers in Gaylord, Lansing and Saginaw aid blind persons. The Cristo Rey Hispanic Handicapper program in Lansing serves the Spanish-speaking population. (Others are in Kalamazoo, Ann Arbor, Pontiac and Grand Rapids.)

But the future of these programs, all of them less than seven years old, is uncertain. Robert McConnell, supervisor of program development for Michigan Rehabilitation Services, says the federal government has indicated it will end grants for independent living centers in the summer of 1984.

McCONNELL SAYS centers will necessarily become more dependent living ideas. The bottom line is that even in a time of economic restraint, programs that allow handicappers to be more independent can save money and improve the life of the entire community.

"A program like the CIL . . . the benefits are so obvious," says Ron O'Brien, director of the Detroit center. "To take a person out of a nursing home and stick him in a subsidized apartment, you save $10,000-12,000 a year."

That arithmetic should not be lost on bureaucrats at the federal Department of Health and Human Services, on executives of insurance companies and on legislators.

It is a job only half done when we urge and require appropriate education, barrier-free housing and transportation but let wither the services that help handicappers take advantage of these resources.

and did a lot of thinking. Now I am convinced that we don't die; the body is only a shell, and when it's of no further use, our spirit leaves, transcending to a higher level of existence.

I get discouraged. I have trouble walking, reading, writing and sometimes even talking. Am I accomplishing enough to make my life worthwhile? It is difficult to find useful activities that meet my physical limitations. But I believe I am here for a purpose. My biggest fear is that I am not fulfilling enough of the purpose, that there are things I could and should be doing, but I'm not aware of them. — Your friend, Joseph Gaul.

Dear Joseph: Certainly you are fulfilling one of the purposes you are here for: You are setting an example of courage for others who have not yet found their own strengths.

Your letter will help your peers and others realize that giving up is not the answer to one's own problems — finding solutions is.

Don't just stop when suddenly (and temporarily) you cannot do one kind of work. Shift to what you still can do. Your admirable courage will carry you far.

- St. Gelasius I, who reigned from 492-496 A.D., enriched the celebration of the mass. Some scholars credit him with the writing of books used at the altar by priests during mass.

- St. Athanasius, patriarch of Alexandria, near the northern end of the Nile, is known as the "Father of Orthodoxy." His theological expertise lay behind the formulation of the Nicene Creed in 325 A.D.

- St. Augustine of Hippo, (354-430), one of the church's most outstanding theologians and considered possibly second only to St. Thomas Aquinas, wrote "City of God" and "Confessions," along with hundreds of sermons. These became classics of Christian literature, especially his writings on the doctrine of original sin.

THE BIBLE ITSELF contains references to generally unacknowledged black history. The first Gentile to convert to Christianity, for instance, was a black man — an Ethiopian government official — who met the apostle Philip on the road, listened to what he had to say and requested to be baptized. (Acts 8:27-39). "The eunuch was not just one lone black person drifting along the road," Mr. McNeeley says. "He was a man of great prestige, very well-read, and the conduct (envoy) of the (Ethiopic) Queen."

Old Testament Jewish history is similarly peopled with blacks. Israelites came in contact with the mixed-blood and black Egyptians during their initial stay in that country, through their slavery to the Egyptians and before their sojourn to the promised land.

That intermarriage between Jews and other peoples was common at the time is illustrated by the nuptial choices of the ancestors of the Jewish nation. In addition to Moses' marriage to the Ethiopian, Abraham took Hagar, an Egyptian, to be his wife (Genesis 16:3); Jacob married Rachel, an Aramean (Genesis 29:28); and Joseph married Asenath, an Egyptian (Genesis 41:45).

Those references give further credence to claims of some blacks in both America and Ethiopia that they are Jews.

BLACKS ALSO produced a legacy of Catholic saints.

Perpetua and Felicity, along with four companions, were martyred at Carthage, west of Alexandria, in 203 A.D. Perpetua was a young and socially prominent wife and the mother of a small child. Felicity was a slave, ready to give birth to her first child. Arrested when they refused to offer sacrifice to the emperor, they were sentenced to die in games with wild animals staged for Roman soldiers.

"While in prison awaiting execution," the archdiocesan booklet relates, "their persistent faith and good spirits converted their jailer to Christianity."

Timothy and Maura died in 286 A.D. in Upper Egypt. Timothy was a church lector who would not surrender sacred books to Emperor Diocletian for burning. He was tortured but did not tell the whereabouts of the books. His bride of 20 days, Maura, was brought in to change his mind, but instead she vowed to die with him. They were both nailed to the wall and died after nine days.

Valerian was a bishop of Abbenza in Africa. At age 80, he refused to hand over sacred vessels of his church to the Vandal chieftain Genseric. He was forced into exile and died of starvation in 457 A.D.

One of the few well-known black saints was Martin de Porres, (1579-1639), the illegitimate offspring of a Spanish nobleman and a young black freedwoman. At age 11 he took a job as servant in the priory of a Dominican order. Later placed in charge of the infirmary, he became known for his spectacular cures and relentless comforting of the sick. In recognition of his fame and devotion, his superiors dropped the order's color bar to any persons with black or Indian blood becoming friars. At the age of 24, he was vested in the full habit and was canonized in 1962.

RACIAL SEGREGATION similar to that experienced by St. Martin de Porres has always been prevalent in American denominations, both Catholic and Protestant. Some churches had separate pews and separate distributions of Holy Communion until blacks began to abandon white churches and religious communities to form their own.

The Oblate Sisters of Providence, the first Catholic religious community of black sisters in the United States, was established in 1829. A black woman, Sr. Theresa Maxis, left the Oblate Sisters in 1845 to co-found Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary in Monroe, Mich. That community founded a Catholic parochial high school in Detroit, Immaculata.

In 1875, the Most. Rev. James Healy was consecrated Bishop of Portland, Maine. He was the first black American to become a Catholic bishop. Other black clergy have been promoted to bishoprics — including the recent appointment of the Most Rev. Moses Anderson of Detroit.

If you would, the U.S. Postal Service has got a deal for you.

"We try to phase out old vehicles on a rotating cycle," said Sherman Bloomfield, garage maintenance supervisor for the Fort Wayne post office. "We've probably sold 24 vehicles since May. The six quarter-ton Jeeps we're selling now are nine years old. But apart from a little rust, they're in as good a shape as you'll find anywhere."

The Jeeps cost about $7,000 each in 1974, but you can get one from Uncle Sam for a lot less. Bloomfield said the Jeeps, which have between 50,000 and 70,000 miles on them, cost between $1,000 and $1,150 to buy from the post office.

"We've had young people buy them, hunters, newspaper deliverers, and even other car dealers buy them," Bloomfield said. "But they aren't really passenger vehicles. With that short (81-inch) wheelbase, they can tip if you take corners at high speed."

Despite the fact postal carriers have to deliver through snow and ice, the Jeeps aren't equipped with four-wheel drive. They have just one seat and very plain interiors — but have been freshly painted, to remove post office identification.

And the steering wheels are on the "wrong" side, to allow drivers to deliver mail to mail boxes along roads without leaving their seats. "That's probably the biggest adjustment buyers have to make," Bloomfield said.

The post office isn't trying to drive a hard bargain, despite its no-frills purchase policy.

"We can't allow test drives because the Jeeps are still government property and there would be insurance problems. And the price for the sale is approved by the headquarters in Chicago," he said.

But despite its desire to get the unneeded Jeeps off its lot, the post office won't sell them to its employees. It fears they might spend excessive money and time keeping a Jeep in shape if they thought they could buy it later.

BOND

JARED D. BOND EARLY BANKER IN FORT WAYNE

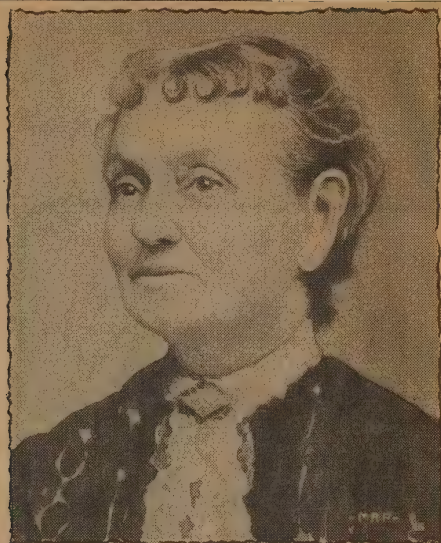

Jared D. Bond (1838-1912) was a leading figure in Fort Wayne financial circles from the mid-1800's until after the turn of the century. He was born in Rockport, N. Y., and soon after coming to Fort Wayne started to work for the former George DeWald & Company and then became cashier of the Fort Wayne Branch of the State Bank of Indiana.

He was one of the incorporators of the Old National Bank where he served as cashier until his retirement in 1904.

Mr. Bond was the third president of Lindenwood Cemetery, serving from 1900 to 1906. He served in the Union Army with the rank of captain and was one of the organizers of the city's first baseball team, the Summit City Club of 1862. Mr. Bond was buried in Lindenwood, a non-sectarian, non-profit cemetery and owned by the families it serves.

NEE VERMILYEA

EARLY LEADER IN LOCAL CHARITIES

Mrs. Jessie Maria Bond (1844-1914) was well known here for her philanthropic work before and after the turn of the century. At the time of her death it was reported, "perhaps no one individual in the city took a greater interest in works of charity than did Mrs. Bond."

Mrs. Bond was especially interested in the development of the old Hope Hospital, the Visiting Nurses League and the Allen County Children's Home. She was the daughter of Jesse Vermilyea and was born in the old Vermilyea mansion built in 1839 in Aboite township. Her father was one of the original directors of the Fort Wayne Branch Bank.

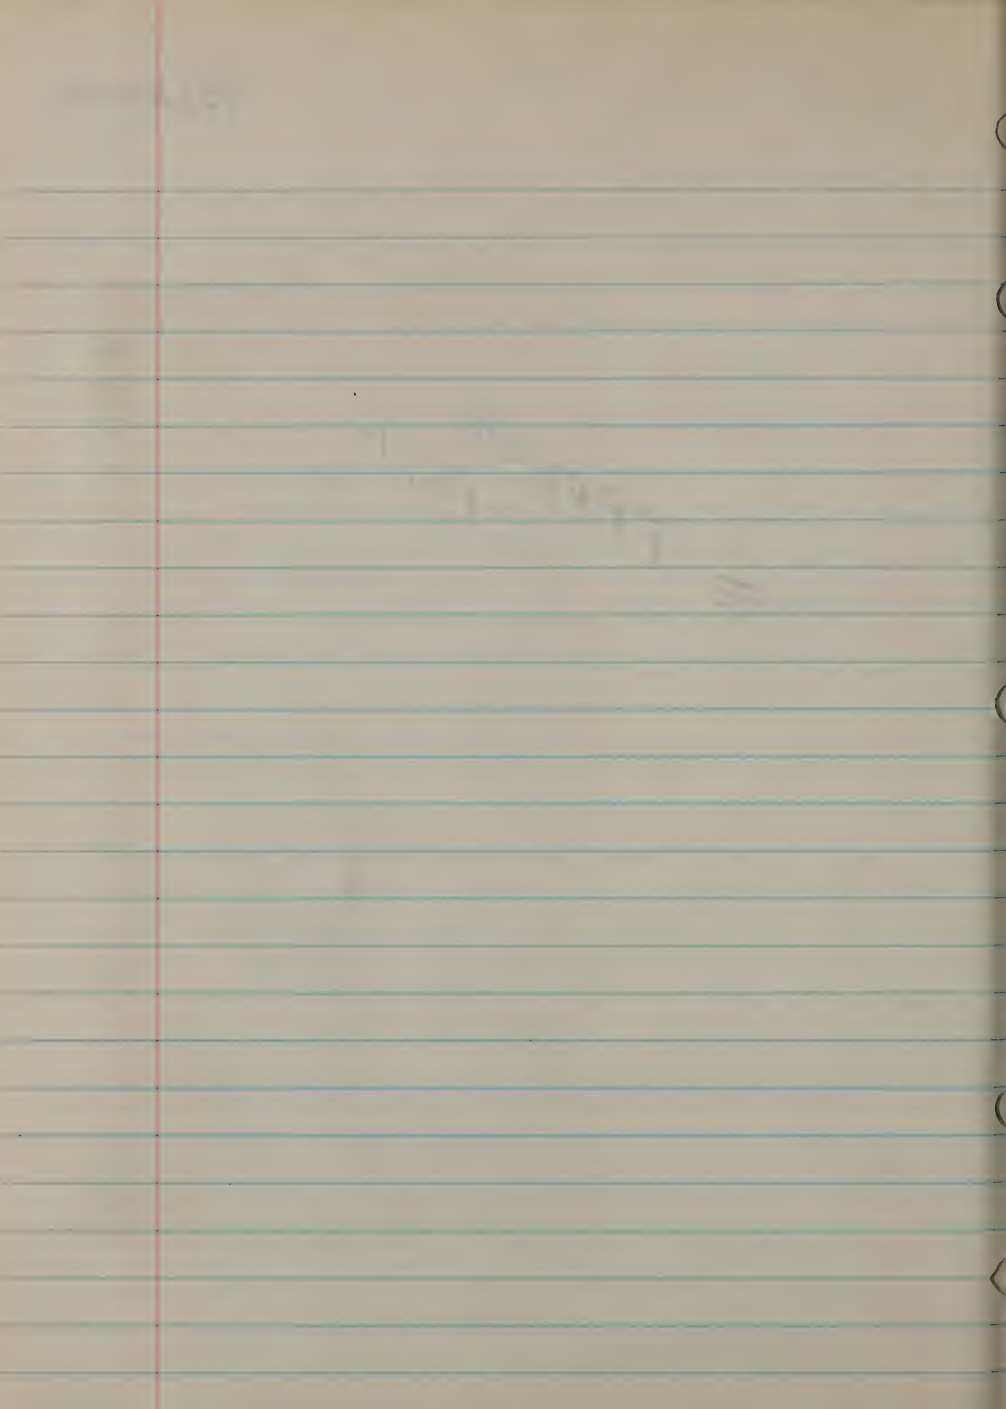

Mrs. Bond was the wife of the late Stephen E. Bond, former president of the Old National Bank. The Bonds rest in Lindenwood, one of America's great cemeteries.

Cityscapes: Bowser and his pumps

EDITOR'S NOTE: The industrial face of Fort Wayne today is radically different than it was at the turn of the century. Instead of International Harvester and Magnavox, there were the Bass Foundry and F.S. Bowser, Inc. — companies which put Fort Wayne on the nation's industrial map. In the next few weeks, Cityscapes will focus on the industries which helped make the city's early days so prosperous.

The Tokheim Corp. is still turning out thousands of gasoline pumps in Fort Wayne every year. But the real granddaddy of the pump industry was S.F. Bowser, Inc., which began operations on Creighton Avenue in 1888.

When Sylvanus Freelove Bowser first dreamed of inventing the pump, little did he realize his invention would one day evolve into the gasoline pump, the machine which has come to symbolize the ridiculousness of our era. He just wanted to find an easier way of drawing water from a well than tugging on a 70-foot strand of frozen rope.

Bowser thought his idea for a pump might have some commercial value, so he and his brother Alexander went into business — and what a business it was. By the 1920s, the company was selling $13 million worth of gas pumps worldwide. Bowser offices were set up in Toronto, London, Berlin, Paris and Rotterdam — but the headquarters remained in Fort Wayne.

The neighborhood near the plant eventually became known as "Bowserville," because of the plant employees living there.

There were low spots along the way, too. The plant was struck by fire in 1894 and again in 1897. An employee financial scandal in 1898 jeopardized the company's solvency. S.F. Bowser also had union troubles, and a bank he established for employees folded with the Depression.

Bowser lost control of the company in the early 1930s, and his life after that was not a happy one. In 1937 he was taken to court over questions of his ability to care for himself. The court ruled in Bowser's favor, but he died about a year later. When he died, his estate, once worth millions, totaled only $11,000.

By the mid-1950s, the Bowser operation here was winding down and it eventually moved to Chicago.

There is still much of the original plant left on Creighton Avenue. Most of the buildings are owned by Wayne Warehouse and Cartage Inc. and are leased to Mobile Aerial Towers. Wayne Warehouse also owns the old Wayne Knitting Mills on Growth Avenue, which will be featured next week. ■

Sunday. No female employee was allowed to wear her skirt higher than eight inches above the floor. Bowser himself would frequently appear in the offices with a yardstick to hold inspection.

Bowser's paternalistic policies, though based in his sincere belief that he was improving the lives of his workers, backlashed with the strike of 1919. It was a long and of-influence began to disappear, and the company changed from being an extension of his personality to a more normal manufacturing corporation.

Court battles with his family over his competency marred his last years before he died on Oct. 3, 1938, aged 84.

INNOVATION

S.F. Bowser:

Pump inventor displayed unusual personality

The area around the 1300 block of East Creighton Avenue was once known as "Bowserville." Today the block is still dominated by the massive six-story "Bowser Building," which was the headquarters of the S.F. Bowser pump manufacturing company.

Behind it sprawl several square blocks of the abandoned plant where 65 years ago, in the era of World War I, there operated the largest pump and fuel tank factory in the world.

Today, the old "Bowser Building" is the administrative center of the Phelps-Dodge Magnet Wire Co., which has been the tenant since fire destroyed the original Phelps-Dodge office in the mid-1970s. Thanks to this company the grand old building on Creighton Avenue has been preserved. The plant facilities behind the building, however, have fallen to ruin.

If the "Bowser Building" represents the old Bowser pump company at its height, it also is a symbol of the decline that beset the business in the decades after 1920.

Construction of this home office building began in 1917, a year in which sales for the company were reaching a high point of over $8 million. The cost of the structure was slated at $350,000, but numerous delays and the constant addition of "frills" and "extras" eventually drove the cost to more than three times the original amount. The result was that badly needed capital was spent unnecessarily and the company was forced into debt just on the eve of the post-war depression of 1920.

Nevertheless, the building was grand. Six stories high and built of the best brick and steel, it boasted the use of indirect lighting, executive offices and a lobby finished in red mahogany, a central marble stairway, a specially designed "heavy artistic marquise" at the entrance, and all "strictly fireproof." The ventilation system was extravagant for 1917, being designed to "wash the air thoroughly before entering the workrooms, and completely changed every 15 minutes." In summer the air conditioning kept the temperature inside 15 degrees below that outside.

On the sixth floor was a large assembly hall for about 1,500, including a women's lounge, easy chairs, piano, and magazine collection. Double ramps led to the basement where dozens of racks were provided for employees' bicycles. A new "automatic telephone" system, inter-floor mail chutes, marble and tiled bathrooms, and 3,000 electrical outlets completed the catalogue of special features.

The building was designed to ex- tol the paternal role of the company management. It was meant to be the embodiment of the Bowser concept of "a business built on the idea of liberality to all — a happy institution working under conditions which make for peace." Above all, it was a monument to the company's founder and president, Silvanus Freelove Bowser, whose lifeline bust stood in the center of the lobby.

S.F. Bowser, the inventor of the gasoline pump, was one of the most extraordinary business personalities in Fort Wayne history. The story of his career is the classic "from rags to riches" tale in the mold of Horatio Alger.

Born in 1854 in Perry Township eight miles north of Fort Wayne, Bowser was one of 13 children of John and Eliza, who had come from Pennsylvania in 1833. After a disastrous attempt at pioneering on the Kansas frontier in 1859 where they were robbed of their cattle, wagons, tool and money, the family was back in Allen County in 1861.

The father and boys took whatever labor they could, leaving little room for formal education. Young Silvanus, at age 13, was allowed to go to school in 1867, but he only attended for about three months before having to return to work with his father.

Bowser was deeply religious. From an early age he laboriously memorized hundreds of Biblical passages, and at one time he recalls having a vision in which God called him to preach; but he declined, explaining that he had but little schooling and yet a large family to help support. His religious temperament and deep sense of moral conviction remained strong nevertheless.

In 1876 he married a Fort Wayne woman named Sarah Russell, whose family recently had arrived from Northern Ireland.

By 1882 Bowser had taken a traveling sales job for a Chicago paper firm, but he seems to have had a nervous breakdown in 1884. Deeply in debt and having lost his house and his health, Bowser gradually began to work again, selling paper and tinware for a friend.

One cold morning early in 1885, as Bowser often recounted, he went to the well to draw water for his wife before leaving on a short sales trip. The mist rising from the 70-foot well froze on the ropes, making the task of hauling the bucket very uncomfortable. Later, on the road to Decatur, Bowser thought about better ways to raise water from a well, and the idea came to him of a simple pump that would produce a constant measure of liquid with each stroke of the pump handle. Although it turned out not to be feasible for a deep well, this measured pump mechanism revolutionized the oil and, later, gasoline industry by making possible easy, accurate handling of liquid fuels from storage tanks. Before this, common products like kerosene and oil had to be measured by hand, often in a messy and imprecise way. The present-day gas pump evolved from Bowser's rudimentary pump and tank outfit.

In June 1885 Bowser and his brother Alexander set up a crude factory in a barn on Creighton Avenue, and in September they produced their first self-measuring pump, which was then sold to a grocer named Jake Gumpner, for his kerosene tank.

By 1888 patents had been acquired, a sizeable sales and labor force gathered, and the S.F. Bowser & Co. had been organized.

Disaster struck in 1894 when the entire company facility was leveled by a fire. Insurance paid for a new, largely brick complex which was widely touted as completely fire proof. When it burned to the ground in 1897 there was almost no insurance, and the company took a terrific loss. Despite all this, however, Bowser's sales enthusiasm and the impressive product enabled the company to grow rapidly again. By 1906 sales exceeded $1 million and only 10 years later sales were more than $6.5 million.

What made Bowser Pump so extraordinary was the intensely personal, patriarchal and autocratic manner in which S.F. Bowser himself ran the company. His own enthusiasm and irrepressible optimism, and an abiding faith that what he did had God's blessing, lay behind much of the success of the company. In sales, he stimulated aggressiveness through contests, awards, sales schools, rallies and publication of "The Bowser Boomer," a high-pitched monthly company magazine.

For those in the plant, Bowser insisted on providing the best materials and tools to the workers. He also explored numerous ways to make the worksite more pleasant, taking care, for instance, to insure decent ventilation and lighting. More unusual were Bowser's efforts to make employment with the company something special — and to ensure loyalty among the workers.

Bowser organized, for example, the Bowser Employees Relief Union in 1908 to provide sick, accident and death benefits for paying members (later called the Bowser Employees Mutual Benefit Association), and the Bowser Loan and Trust Co. (1919), which gave preferential treatment to employees. The Loan

God, the Creator and Redeemer of all the faithful, give to the soul of Thy servant, full remission of all her offenses, that through the help of pious supplications, she may obtain the pardon of which she has always been desirous. Who liveth and reigneth world without end.

Eternal rest grant her, O Lord, and let her actual light shine upon her.

PVT. JAMES BROWN

James Brown, portrayed by H. E. (Doc) Watson, was born in Ireland. He was 48 years old in 1816. Reports described him as 5'7" tall, with grey eyes, brown hair and a fair complexion.

The Army was Brown's career. He was serving in the First Infantry at Fort Wayne as early as July, 1807. He probably had enlisted in 1805 and may have served previous terms. His first definite enlistment date was Oct. 1, 1810, at Fort Wayne.

James Brown was present during the siege of 1812 and was discharged in October, 1815. That month, the First Infantry was transferred into the newly organized Third Infantry.

Brown was court martialed twice: on July 20, 1807, for neglect of duty on post, and on Aug. 1 of the same year for being drunk on guard duty. He was found guilty both times and received 30 and 25 lashes, respectively.

Brown also performed a variety of extra duties, including masonry work.

In February, 1816, he re-enlisted as a substitute for William Floyd, whose term began in 1814.

In the Spring of 1817, Brown's company was transferred to Fort Mackinac, where he served out Floyd's enlistment. He re-enlisted for five years on May 14, 1819. He moved to Camp Smith, Ark., in 1820 and was discharged there on Sept. 24 for "ulcerated leg and general debility."

Watson, a staff engineer in purchasing at Magnavox, has his own view of the character he portrays: "He's an old soldier type, just sitting out the rest of his year or so to go."

H.E. (Doc) Watson poses with an antique game, Hare and Hounds, in which four "hounds" try to entrap a "hare" on the board.

"I'm (Pvt. Brown) taking over the other guy's enlistment, and with the money from that and my pay, I hope to buy some land at 25 cents an acre or so, and move to the frontier."

The 57-year-old New Haven resident became interested in the Old Fort when he saw a placemat painted by local artist Jim McBride. On it was a picture of the fort and the City, and "I decided to build a model of the fort, just for the fun of it," Watson says.

This is Watson's first year portraying an Old Fort character, and he hopes to return next year. "I kind of like the overall idea of going back into history and making it alive for people." □

CITYSCAPES

Seeing our past via the Canal House door

For half a century, from the 1830s to the 1890s, the Wabash and Erie Canal was the central feature of Fort Wayne. The canal changed the young community forever, bringing it from a village to a city and laying its foundations as a rail and industrial center of the Midwest.

But today there are very few traces left of this extraordinary era of canal travel and transport. History buffs will point out where an aqueduct once carried the canal across the St. Mary's River, or they will describe how the present-day elevated tracks of the Norfolk and Western Railroad run along the same path that once was the canal itself. But no longer is there a canal channel; there are no towpaths in town, nor docks or basins. There are none of the great stone and timber locks that raised and lowered the boats through "Summit City," the highest point along the Wabash and Erie Canal.

One simple structure, however, stands as a touching reminder and important artifact of the hubub and hustle of the canal era, 130 years ago. This is the "Canal House," at 114 East Superior St. (then known as Water Street), which today is headquarters for the Fort Wayne Fine Arts Foundation.

Finding the simple truths

For decades this building was all but ignored, and its history obscured. Some believed it to have been a customs house or a ticket office, while others insisted that it was a central part of the great fur-trading conflicts of the Ewings and the Hannas.

But the truth was much simpler — and more instructive. Thanks to the efforts of John E. Lovelond, a wealth of details about the house have been uncovered. By its very ordinariness, we have a precious glimpse into the everyday life of the community in this vibrant and formative time.

Early in its history (1836), the land itself, marshy and little desired as a homestead, was owned by Samuel Hanna, a founder of Fort Wayne and leading backer of the canal. Later, the Townley family, who were then prominent merchants, came to hold the land, and in 1852 they sold it to a man named John Brown, a "Dealer in Stone and Lime," according to his advertisement. It was this John Brown, stone-mason, who built the 22 by 50-foot Canal House that same year, in 1852.

Meet John Brown

John Brown, a young Scotsman, is a striking example of the ordinary sort of English-speaking immigrant who followed the canal to the burgeoning towns of the newly opened west, like Fort Wayne, to make his fortune.

The canal changed the young community forever, bringing it from a village to a city and laying its foundations as a rail and industrial center of the Midwest. But today there are very few traces left of this extraordinary era of canal travel and transport. . . . One simple structure, however, stands as a touching reminder and important artifact of the hubub and hustle of the canal era, 130 years ago. This is the "Canal House," at 114 East Superior St.

— Michael Hawfield

Drover's spoke factory

In Drover there is another example, this time German-speaking, of an everyday sort of person making his career and fortune on the canal.

Henry Drover had arrived in Fort Wayne in 1841 as a farmer, but he soon became a boat captain on the canal, and earned such a local reputation that by the 1850s he served as president of the city's German Fire Company and then, for several years, as a member of Fort Wayne's City Council. In 1857 he moved to Huntington (the other end of his usual canal run) where he straightaway was elected mayor for one term. Later he acted as township trustee, and was chosen to serve in the Indiana legislature from Huntington County.

As for the Canal House itself, Drover used it almost exclusively as a warehouse for his spoke factory and quarry interests. But these day-to-day uses of the building serve as a reminder of the character of central Fort Wayne in those years. All along the area on either side of the canal (today's railroad tracks) were warehouses, both larger and smaller than our Canal House,

Brown had come from Glasgow to Allen County before 1847 with his wife Mary and his sister Elizabeth. He and another Scotsman, named James Humphrey, had been in the stone-cutting and masonry business for some years and as construction of the canal proceeded the two Scots may have had a lucrative part in the extensive stonework that had to be done in building the locks, gateways, piers and pylons of the canal. (It was Humphrey who built the "New Jail" in 1849, the same one that was immediately broken into by "desperados" who rescued two horse-thief friends.)

In the years after Brown built the Canal House he prospered, using the building as his office and storehouse for materials. He had a hand in the first Barr Street Market structure, carried out a lively trade on the canal itself, and became the owner of the first steam-powered grist mill in town, located at the end of Maiden Lane. He was a member of the local militia, the Kekionga Guard, and served as a director of the First and Hamilton National Bank of 1863.

In 1862 Brown sold the Canal House to Henry Drover, a German immigrant from Bremen.

as well as taverns, shops, boarding rooms and docks.

It was the waterfront and often a place of tumult and violence. Although most of the people around the canal area were good people, the nature of the canal attracted roughnecks and n'er-do-wells.

Frequently newspapers carried stories of arson, the presence of drunks and boisterous boatmen, or of prostitutes and thieves. Occasionally, after a murder, editorialists called for the creation of a police force.

During the canal's later years, in the 1870s, the Canal House also served as home for some families. On the second floor, for instance, once lived the family of Minnie Homeyer, whose family came from the town of Loh, Germany. Her father was a canal boatman and in the 1950s she still remembered fondly the many trips she took on the canal boats throughout the region. For a young girl in 1875, this was high adventure and not to be missed.

Downstairs in the Canal House lived another German family, the Borgmans. By this time the Canal traffic had slowed to local transport only, and some men, like "cannawyer" William Borgman at last gave up the boats and changed trades altogether. In Borgman's case, he joined a new local trucking company, and later, he became a policeman, finally rising to be chief of the department in 1897.

Late in the nineteenth century the Canal House, like the Canal itself, passed into the hands of the railroad. The house was used (and abused) for years, but somehow it survived where all the others had fallen away.

In 1974, in preparation for the U.S. Bicentennial, plans were begun for the restoration of the Canal House. Under the leadership of ARCH and the Fort Wayne Bicentennial Commission, funds were raised and research was conducted. By 1976 restoration was completed on what is now one of the finest artifacts remaining from an era that transformed Fort Wayne from a village to a city.
